LEE CROWCHILD

Lee Crowchild is a third-generation chief of Tsuut'ina and a lifelong learner of Tsuut'ina's cultural worldview. He has a deep interest in metaphysics and is a traditional ceremonial person. Lee's beliefs play a strong role in helping him guide our paranormal team through our investigations. Lee is consulted on the approach and direction of the investigation and will also be called in when needed to offer advice or provide protection. Lee may also be tasked with moving the spirits along on their journey and offering cleansing ceremonies if required.

JEFF RICHARDS

"I dreamt that I was in a terrible car accident. A few days later, it happened, compelling me to develop my own gift – one that both frightens and fills me with hope."

Jeff is a busy father of four little boys, but he's also a well-known mentalist and intuitive. His extremely sensitive readings of people amaze audiences and drive listeners to his paranormal radio show. But even more amazing is his ability to juggle the demands of parenting with the constant and pervasive contact with the unseen. While it's sometimes mentally and spiritually draining, he chooses to keep sharing his gift and forging ahead – with one foot planted firmly in this world and one in The Other Side.

SHANLEY SPENCE

Shanley Spence, also known as "Wapan Kisikawi Pisim Iskwew" (Early Morning Sun Woman) is a descendent of Nihithaw and Anishinaabe peoples from Mathias Colomb Cree Nation and Lake St. Martin First Nation. She was raised in the urban inner city of Winnipeg with a balance of life in the ceremonial and powwow trails. Her highly sensitive gifts to energy and entities have been present since she was child, but only recently has she been attuning and learning how to work with these gifts. Her empathic, intuitive abilities led her down a path of spiritual work through dance, embodiment and now holistic life guidance to those in the living world and the other side.
